Times are hard in the F1 world! How to cut costs and keep within that £40m budget? Well we have found the answer, lose the engine! Supplied with detailed blueprints, each team will build and race their own self-propelled F1 Racing car complete with spoilers, front and back.

We supply a range of building supplies from giant sheets of cardboard to inner carpet tubes and pre-cut 55cm wheels plus a range of fabrics and accessories for decorating the finished product. We also give the teams the tools they need to cut, trim and build their vehicle as well as supporting staff to help them along the way.

The teams start by drawing up their design on the cardboard sheets, taking measurements from their blueprints. Once drawn, these need cutting and then assembling. It's a true production line job!

That's the easy bit. Once finished the teams must test their mean machine against the others in the finale race off with one volunteer on board!

This is a fantastic building challenge that has something for everyone and combines physical building work with creative design application and is well suited to many conferences that have any sort of racing messages to put across. It also provides a visually exciting finale as teams realise they need constant work and pit stops to get through the heats to the finale.

Allow 2-3 hours for this activity which can be done indoors, as long as we have sufficient room for the finale race circuit, or outside, depending on the group size.
